CARL ANDERSON'S

HENRY

We all know and observe "MOTHER'S DAY" and "FATHER'S DAY," but did you ever hear of—"UNCLE'S DAY"?

Probably not, for "Uncle's Day" was an original idea of Henry's, and like so many of HIS brainstorms it came and went like a sudden hurricane.

It all started when Henry took his usual slide down the banister one bright, crisp afternoon last week. Either the banister is not as strong as it used to be, or Henry is continuing to add poundage to his well-rounded figure, or both. Consequently, the bald one zipped down the rail like a jet plane, and hit the ball on the top of the newel post with such force that something HAD to go. It did! The ball flew into the dining room, as Henry bounced around on the floor, thankful that he was so well-upholstered.

"JEEPERS," HE EXCLAIMED, WHEN HE REGAINED HIS BEARINGS, "I'LL HAVE TO PATCH UP THAT POST BEFORE MOM OR UNK DISCOVERS IT."

Henry scampered to the basement and returned, in a wink, with a can of glue. He dabbed a bit of the stickum to the bottom of the ball, and another bit to the top of the newel post, and balanced the former on the latter.

"There," he announced with satisfaction. "It's almost as good as new."

Henry completed the job not a minute too soon, because his mother came bustling into the house, laden with groceries.

"Follow me to the kitchen, dear," she directed with authority. "I want you to peel some potatoes for me."

Henry followed instructions, as any good boy should. In a matter of minutes he was deep in the task of paring the peelings from a big potful of spuds . . . when his wandering mind took off in another direction.

A reproachful "HENRY!" broke into his reverie.

"LOOK AT THESE POTATOES," HIS MOTHER'S VOICE WAS SAYING. "THEY RESEMBLE MARBLES! LEAVE MORE POTATO AND LESS PEELING, YOUNG MAN."

"Phew!" phewed Henry to himself. "I thought Mom discovered the broken banister. That was a CLOSE SHAVE." His eyes blazed at the word. "SHAVE! Of course. Why didn't I think of it before? Unk has a new electric razor."

And so . . . the gentle whirr of Unk's prized electric razor, as it skimmed over a giant State of Maine, was the only noise that greeted Unk, when he threw open the front door with a booming:

"WELL, HERE I AM. WHERE'S EVERYBODY ELSE?"

He expertly tossed his hat toward the newel post, where it landed atop the freshly-mended ball.

Unk strode into the kitchen. His bright smile collapsed to shocked amazement when he saw what he saw.

"THAT ISN'T MY NEW RAZOR?" he yelled in disbelief.

Grabbing the instrument out of Henry's hands, Unk ran from the room, sputtering something like: "I'll take it right down to the repair shop!"

HENRY OBSERVES UNK'S DAZE

He reached for his hat, but unfortunately, lifted, not only the skimmer, BUT THE BALL FROM THE NEWEL POST, TOO! Unk banged himself on the noggin with a dull thud.

When Henry reached his uncle, he saw a faint smile on his face.

"Good old Unk, always clowning," he marveled. "What a man! They ought to name a day for him. That's it. . . an UNCLE'S DAY!"

Enthused with his great idea, Henry dashed out of the house, down the block, and into the printing shop of Caleb Slugg who specialized in greeting cards. He excitedly explained his plan to Mr. Slugg, who listened attentively.

"Henry, you've stumbled onto the most refreshing greeting card angle I've heard of in years," beamed the printer. "An Uncle's Day, imagine! All we need now is a verse or two to get the thing rolling."

"Oh, I thought of a verse on the way over," offered Henry, brightly. "Listen to this:

"ROSES ARE RED, VIOLETS ARE BLUE,
TODAY, DEAR UNK, I THINK OF YOU.
I FIND MYSELF FOREVER HOPIN'
YOUR WALLET WILL BE ALWAYS OPEN!"

"Hmmmmm," mused Mr. Slugg. "I don't think that's quite the best approach to the matter. Suppose you leave the verses to me, Henry," said printer Slugg, digging into his pocket. "Here's a new dollar bill for your 'Uncle's Day' suggestion. You run along, and I'll dream up some appropriate lines."

"Wow!" thought Henry, "a whole dollar! Unk loves fishing. I'll buy him something at the sporting goods store. We'll celebrate the first Uncle's Day."

Well, his intentions were good, but along came Henrietta.

Alas! The new dollar bill disappeared in the form of sodas and candy.

Did Unk get that fishing gift? Why, sure!

Henry dug up a whole tin can full of fat, wriggly worms! HAPPY UNCLE'S DAY TO YOU!
